

Sherri Hundley is the executive director of CASA of the Tennessee Valley. She earned her Family Development Credentials at Iowa State University and has a passion to provide services to families and children who are in crisis. Prior to coming to CASA, Sherri was a program director for Mid-East Community Action Agency for nine years, and managed the Loudon County Services. Sherri has nearly twenty years of experience working in the nonprofit, social services sector both locally and internationally.

She is the founder and director of Promise Africa, a 501c3 with a mission to support orphans, widows, students and families in crisis in East Africa. Through Board of Directors development, volunteer training and extensive field work in East Africa, the method of support was to identify individuals, small organizations, or ministries who were already serving their communities and to empower them to become registered nonprofits and eventually become self-sustaining. This experience gave Sherri a deep appreciation for how nonprofits have the ability to improve the quality of life for whole communities, both internationally and locally. Sherri and her husband Jeff have been married for twenty-six years and have three adult children, two precious granddaughters, and two spoiled dogs.

When asked what motivates Sherri, she responds "I believe every child deserves someone to celebrate them, love them and fearlessly fight on their behalf."
